Woman Bares Secret Of Youth
On 68th Birthday Anniversary;
Was Union Army 'Drummer Boy'

For 58 years Mrs. Anna Glud, of Oakland, Calif., has nursed a romantic secret.

And then, on her 68th birthday, with a family group about her, the white haired old lady revealed the amazing story of how, at the outbreak of the Civil war, she had cut her hair, donned the uniform of a Union fighter and gone to the war as Tom Hunley a drummer boy.

That she had not previously bared her secret was due partially to the fact that her family had been divided on the war issues and she waited for time to heal the wounds; partially because of a somewhat natural reticence.

But she did not wish the secret to go to the grave with her and so the story of Tom Hunley came to light. Two persons had known her secret—Jeremiah Hunley, her father, and Gen. Grant, in whose charge her father had placed her.

The Hunley's lived in a "border" state. Two sons went with the Union forces and two with the Confederates. Then the father was called.

Father Cuts Hair. The secret of leaving his little girl among strangers, unprotected and uncared for, was too much, so he dressed her in the uniform of a drummer boy, cut off her hair, told her to always remember her name was "Tom," and joined the regiment.

For two years "Tom" Hunley and "his" father served with the Union forces in the bloodiest battles of the Civil war. Never once was the identity of the little "drummer boy" suspected. There came a day, however, when Jeremiah was forced to reveal the secret of his daughter's masquerade. Gen. Grant inspected the regiment and seeing the diminutive "drummer boy" decided "he" was too young for active service, and ordered "him" mustered out. Thereupon Jeremiah told him the story of the motherless little girl. The general swore himself to secrecy and ordered "Tom" Hunley's retention in the service.

Reminiscing, the former "Tom" Hunley said: "During all that time, though many comrades that I looked more like than a boy, not one soldier discovered that I was a girl. Father and I kept together so constantly that I was always protected. Had I not had his assistance I know I must have presented a most ludicrous picture when my mother-in-law made her astonished reference to Katie, for my mouth flew wide open in my amazement, and I gazed at her wide-eyed. That in my nervous state I had the self-control to keep speech from my opened lips is a marvel to me.

Dicky, however, was not so prudent. He evidently took every "you" for "I," and he was not long in revealing himself, because she had pointedly addressed the first one to him. "When I planned to let Katie go away for a vacation," he repeated, the first personal pronoun as though it were a new kind of oath. "Well, if it isn't the noisy outside limit! Am I awake or dreaming all this?"

"If you're awake, it's more than you usually are at this time in the morning," his mother retorted tartly. "I planned to let Katie go away for a vacation. But Margaret did, and you agreed to it."

"Well, I'll be—!" Dicky snorted, but by a well-timed signal behind my mother-in-law's back I managed to which he was consigning himself, to forestall his mention of the state I had mastered my astonishment and was anxious, for the sake of peace, to keep my impetuous husband from recalling to his mother's mind that it was her objection to having Katie accompany us south which had led to my planning a vacation for my faithful little maid during our absence. That neither he nor any one else could ever convince her of that fact I saw from the patent honesty with which she had made the statement concerning Katie. She actually believed that she had advised me to bring Katie with me, and that I had rejected her counsel.

So I repeated my signal of silence to Dicky, and had hard work to keep from laughing at his puzzled frown as he obeyed me. Fortunately his mother didn't notice his sudden silence. She was evidently full of some subject which she wished to discuss with me.

That Mrs. Lukens is really a very decent sort of woman," she began. I never have been able to discover why my mother-in-law prefixes to the name of any stranger the word "that," but it is her invariable habit, and I smiled involuntarily at the familiar introduction.

"You speak, of her as if she were a piece of graham bread," Dicky commented, but I interrupted him hastily. "Never mind him, mother," I said, throwing a provocatively mischievous glance at my husband. "His making an altitude ascension this morning. Tell me about Mrs. Lukens."

and she said that I could have stood the rigors of a soldier's life during those two dreadful years.

Feet Red With Blood. "Why, in a battle near Davisville, when 7,000 confederates and northerners were killed, out little body of men literally had to climb over the bodies of dead soldiers in order to fight our way out. My little feet were red with blood. And when we were mustered out in the fall of 1864 there were but 17 members of our company left."

The war over, Jeremiah and "Tom" Hunley settled down in Indiana. But the rigors of war were too much for the father and in six months time he followed his wife and four sons into the beyond, leaving his little girl, now re-named in the dress of her son, to continue under the guidance of newly-made friends.

Twenty years later, Gen. Grant died without having revealed the secret of "Tom" Hunley, and a secret it has remained until recently when Mrs. Glud revealed it.

Revelations of a Wife
My Heart and My Husband
By Adele Garrison

"You'll both weep for my company when I bestow it upon you again," Dicky declared loftily, making for the door. But the face he turned toward me from the threshold was distinctly approving, and I knew that he was grateful to me for giving him the opportunity to escape the possibility of his mother's wrath.

"Richard has been getting absolutely irresponsible lately," I remarked. "I think it's the influence of that Grantland on him. He never used to act this way."

I choked down an amazed sigh which would have mortally offended my august mother-in-law. But the idea of stern, silent almost unsociable Hugh Grantland, whom Dicky cordially disliked, influencing him to silly, teasing conversation was almost too much for my risibilities.

"But I didn't come in to talk about Richard," Mother Graham went on. "I just wanted to tell you that Mrs. Lukens came over this morning and said that until you got well she would let us have Mandy to help us out. It seems there is just herself for meals."

"I'm simply ravenous," I said, and meant it. Indeed, I was surprised at my own quick recovery from the absolute nervous exhaustion which had prostrated me on the train. But the opportunity to rest undisturbed, which the car-drawing-room had afforded me, and the wonderful air which had enveloped me during my dreamless sleep in Mrs. Lukens' sleeping porch had worked wonders with me.

"I'm glad of that," my mother-in-law remarked, practically, "but there are mighty few things I'm going to let you have today. No meat or eggs or anything like that. I'm not going to have you worse again."

I started to assert in no uncertain terms that my trouble had been nervous, not digestive, but prudently changed my remark to one from which I tried to extract the wearied annoyance I felt.

"I wish you'd decide on something and surprise me," I said, with the strenuous wish that Dicky would hasten to bring the physician he had promised.

ASK DIVORCE FROM STOCK YARD LAWS

Big Packing Companies Ask Separation From Regulations Now in Effect.

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Final legal steps for the divorce of the big packers from stock yards and stock yards railroad control were taken here today.

Swift and company and Armour and company filed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia plans for the disposal of their stock yards and terminal railroad interests. Such plans for the Morris, Wilson and Cudahy companies have already been approved by the court.

If the Swift and Armour plans are approved the government will have completed the packer suits which have been fought for more than a year.

The Swift and Armour plan provides that:

1.—Within 30 days of its approval by the court the packers shall deliver to the Illinois Trust and Savings bank, Chicago, all "evidences of stock ownership" in stock yards companies.

2.—W. Anderson, Richmond, Va., and George Sutherland, S. Lake City, Utah, shall be named trustees, with authority to vote the stock until it is sold, and report to the court program made.

3.—The packers will proceed with due diligence to sell the stock yards and railroad stock. Purchasers must make affidavit to the court they buy in good faith and not as agents for the packers. The court must approve every individual stock sale. The packers are permitted a "fair and reasonable value" for the stock and if, within a year, they have not been able to sell at that figure the court may extend the time.

Rules Wine Not Staple Product on U. S. Markets

By International News Service. WASHINGTON, April 12.—The federal reserve board today ruled that wine is not "a readily marketable staple" and that drafts secured by wine in bonded warehouses are not eligible for rediscount by federal reserve banks. The ruling, however, does not affect the right of a bank to make a loan on the note of a borrower, secured by warehouse receipts for wine in bond. The ruling was brought out on the contention of holders of macramental wine that warehouse receipts on their holdings were security for drafts.

ASKS PROBE OF RAILROADS. WASHINGTON, April 12.—A far-reaching investigation of the country's railroad conditions by the senate interstate commerce committee is provided in a resolution introduced in the senate today by Sen. Cummins, republican, of Iowa, the committee chairman.
